Your Personality Type

Extraversion vs Introversion

28% Extraversion — 72% Introversion

Moderate Introversion

You lean toward introversion. You prefer meaningful one-on-one conversations over large group interactions. While you can function well in social settings, you need regular alone time to recharge. You tend to think before you speak and prefer to observe before participating. You value depth over breadth in your relationships.

Sensing vs Intuition

69% Sensing — 31% Intuition

Moderate Sensing

You lean toward sensing. You generally prefer dealing with concrete information and practical matters, though you can appreciate the occasional abstract idea. You tend to be realistic and observant, noticing details that others might miss. You value experience and prefer to learn by doing rather than theorizing.

Thinking vs Feeling

75% Thinking — 25% Feeling

Moderate Thinking

You lean toward thinking in your decision-making. You generally prefer logical analysis and objective criteria, though you also consider people's feelings when important. You tend to be fair-minded and consistent, and you value competence and accuracy. You can be empathetic but ultimately rely on reason when making tough choices.

Judging vs Perceiving

67% Judging — 33% Perceiving

Moderate Judging

You lean toward judging. You generally prefer having a plan and working in an organized manner, though you can be flexible when needed. You like to set goals and meet deadlines, and you feel more comfortable when things are decided rather than left open-ended. You appreciate structure but can adapt when circumstances change.
